Growth

Quarterly growth is measured as the change of revenue against the previous quarter, where R_1 and R_2 are the revenues of the two quarters:

$$g = \frac{R_2 - R_1}{R_1} \times 100\%$$

Every month of the quarter beat the same month of last year. June was the strongest month on record²; the summer sale moved part of the July demand into it, so July will look weaker in comparison.

Next steps

1. Open the second store in the north
 - a. Choose the site by the end of July
 - b. Hire and train the staff in August
2. Move the west region fully online
3. Report the third quarter by 15 October

² Since the company started monthly reporting in 2019.
